the combined Chinese Communist and North Korean forces would start the strongest offensive yet seen in Korea in early June. The offensive would be called the "end the war by its first anniversary offensive." The Chinese Communists and North Koreans have been promised large amounts of equipment by the Soviets for the June attack. The April-May offensive was a feeler for the June offensive.

2. the Chinese Communists believe if they had intervened in the summer of 1950 on the Pusan-Taegu perimeter they would have provoked the United Nations intolerably. The Chinese Communists decided to move into Korea in October 1950 on the following basis:

- A. It was United States policy to avoid provoking China or the USSR at any cost.
- B. The United States and United Nations were not ready to wage war with the Chinese Communists even though the Chinese Communist troops entered Korea.
- C. The United States had no definite defense line in Asia.
